Comment Zone: Our Blogroll

By THE EMPIRE ZONE

The Empire Zone is looking to add some fresh links to our blogroll, as we ramp up for the elections. Any suggestions?

Ideology or partisan leanings don't matter, but we prefer sites that update frequently with original content and focus to a large degree on politics in our local coverage area (New York, New Jersey and Connecticut).

Post your suggestions and links below in the comments — and feel free to tell us why your suggestion is a good site. (You can also send us an e-mail message.)

How about a link to a blog that actually focuses on issues that matter rather than shallow, pedestrian 'easy' news.

CJA's responding comment, sent to THE NEW YORK TIMES' Empire Zone Blog on October 24, 2006, at approximately 4:05 p.m.:

In response to your solicitation -- extended belatedly, with only two weeks remaining to the elections -- I have a perfect link for you. It is one that meets ALL your stated CRITERIA -- and answers the request of your first posted commenter, "How about a link to a blog that actually focuses on issues that matter..."

The link is: <http://www.judgewatch.org/elections2006-informing-voters.htm> . It is the webpage entitled "Elections 2006: Preserving Democracy by Informing the Voters" -- and is part of the website of the non-partisan, non-profit (& New York-based) citizens' organization, Center for Judicial Accountability, Inc. (CJA).

The essential role of the press in our democracy is to inform voters as to the RECORDS IN OFFICE of public officers. That is what CJA's "Elections 2006: Informing the Voters" webpage does -- providing a mountain of READILY-VERIFIABLE PRIMARY SOURCE DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE as to the records in office of Attorney General Eliot Spitzer & Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton, establishing their participation and complicity in systemic governmental corruption involving the processes of judicial selection & discipline.

For this reason, CJA's "Elections 2006" webpage must be a posted link -- so that even at this late juncture The New York Times and other media (& bloggers) may meet their critical First Amendment obligations to the voters and salvage and restore legitimacy and competition to New York's sham, non-competitive statewide elections for Governor and Senator -- and focus on what really matters in the (hardly competitive) race for Attorney General.

Meantime your solicitation -- and this response -- will be posted on CJA's "Elections 2006: Informing the Voters" webpage.

Thank you.
