NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN Special Award 1981 to Doris L. Sassower

Introductory remarks by Sheila Feiger, President, upon presentation of 1981 Special Award to Doris L. Sassower at the Annual Convention of N.O.W.-New York State, May 16, 1981.

During the 1980 legislative session, N.O.W.-New York State put forth a mammoth effort to obtain economic justice in New York The battle, unfortunately, was not State matrimonial law. equal, since full disclosure for all issues could not be presented either to members of the bar or the public. The vested interests of men in maintaining their property were protected. One of the major voices in the struggle to protect the most dependent persons in society--women with children and other women--was that of Doris L. Sassower. Despite attempts to silence her and unwarranted personal attacks by a tiny--but powerful--clique of the matrimonial bar, she expended fierce efforts in the fight to obtain the law which would offer economic justice. At great financial sacrifice, professionally and personally, she traveled to Albany, wrote, called and pressured, to convince the matrimonial bar and the legislature that they were making bad law. The first equitable distribution case has come out of the courts and has proven that Doris and we were right.

Doris, for many years now, has been an advocate of justice for women who have devoted their lives to the roles society has so emphatically assigned them; homemaker and mother. Doris has written extensively and effectively, and has spoken widely and brilliantly on these issues.

Because of her long term effort, and especially because of her courage in voicing the principles of equity, because of our working together, because—even among women attorneys she was one of the few to put self-interest aside, we have asked her here to share our conference, to meet our members and to permit us to honor her efforts.
