

this publication to be independently investigated, and the results of its investigation published.

You should also make copies of this publication, distribute them to your friends and acquaintances, with the request that they in turn communicate with the media of their choice, and make further copies for distribution, since it is their country, their government, their judicial system, and their pocketbook, as well.

The imputation of knowledge concerning judicial corruption and criminal activities, including by Chief Justice Rehnquist, and the citizen's concomitant responsibilities, particularly where the state and federal purses are being defrauded, may not be avoided by the simple expedient of closing one's eyes, covering one's ears, and holding one's breath.

A fundamental and essential principle of American jurisprudence is that no man, no matter how exalted his official position or status in life, is above the criminal and ethical laws of the society.

The criminal and ethical laws bind all men equally, the judge, no less than the judged.